"Grow Appalachia" Organic Gardening Comes To WESTCARE

Gardening is one of the most popular activities in America. Studies by the United States Department of Agriculture indicate that gardening is the largest recreational pursuit in this country. To be able to view the product that you have raised, say to yourself that I produced this myself, and to be able to consume the fruits of your labor provide tremendous personal satisfaction.

Here in Estill County, residents who don't have the perfect site for a home organic vegetable garden have tremendous opportunity to have a space in the Community Organic Garden provided by the WestCare organization. This is a great opportunity to grow vegetables and herbs of your choice at a central location with good soil and a community of gardening enthusiasts who share the same passion as you.

The concept of community gardens began several years ago but faded out following World War II. In the 1970's the ecological movement gained steam and the concept took off again. We are at a point in time again where interest in gardening is at an all time high with increased emphasis on health, nutrition and exercise for a well rounded lifestyle. Our community is most fortunate to have recognized this need and responded to the request of its citizens.

An informational meeting will be held on Wednesday, February 12, 2014 at 5:00 p.m. at 108 Main Street in Irvine. Spots are limited so please join us on February 12 or call 606.726.0385, if you have any questions. This program will be assisted by Grow Appalachia and Eastern Kentucky University Regional Stewardship program.

Cattle Lice Can Reduce Profits

Lice can suck the profits out of your beef and dairy cattle herds during the winter. These cold-loving pests spread when animals bunch together in response to frigid temperatures, and we've already had plenty of those.

You can reduce potential lice problems on cattle by keeping new animals separate from your herd until you've given them a thorough louse treatment, generally two applications of a contact insecticide.

The first application kills active adults and immature lice, but it won't destroy nits on the hide. A second application targets new hatchlings from the nits and any other lice still around. Be sure to follow the label instructions on treatment intervals. After these two treatments, you can add new animals to the herd with minimal chance of lice problems during the winter.

Don't use systemic insecticides during the winter unless you know the treatment history of newly bought cattle. This is because migrating grubs might be in sensitive locations and cause an adverse reaction this time of year.

Additionally, winter is a good time to reduce future weevil problems in alfalfa by letting beef or dairy cattle graze dormant fields. Alfalfa weevils lay a significant number of their eggs in living and dead stems. Winter grazing helps manage alfalfa weevils in two ways. Grazing removes stems holding deposits of weevil eggs, and it removes stems that can serve as sites for females to lay the remaining eggs in the spring. Letting your cattle graze alfalfa fields in the winter can reduce weevil populations substantially, possibly to the level that you won't need a spring insecticide application.

For more information on controlling lice and other livestock insect pests, contact the Estill County Extension Service at 723-4557.

Educational programs of the Cooperative Extension Service serve all people regardless of race, color, age, sex, religion, disability or national origin.

Victorian flower etiquette

During the 1800s, as the tradition of using flowers to express messages spread, flower dictionaries became available. John Ingram's Flora Symbolica (1887) included not only the meanings of one hundred flowers but stressed the etiquette in giving the correct flowers to present the message intended. Meanings were given based on myths, traditions, medical use and, at times, simply the active imagination of the one writing the dictionary. - Brenda Weaver

HERE IS A PLEASANT LITTLE GAME that will give you a message every day. It's a numerical puzzle designed to spell out your fortune. Count the letters in your first name. If the number of letters is 6 or more, subtract 4. If the number is less than 6, add 3. The result is your key number. Start at the upper left-hand corner and check one of your key numbers, left to right. Then read the message the letters under the checked figures give you.
