

Volunteers continue to help flood victims

The Furnace Mountain Singers opened a benefit on Saturday for flood victims of Estill County. The benefit was organized by Dr. John Allen, who also ran the sound system for the singers. Donations for Estill Rising can be made through the Kentucky Steam Heritage group.

Volunteers put up the last wall on a storage building in Ravenna. This wall was the one with the opening for double doors. The walls were already built when they arrived in Irvine last week. All other parts were pre-cut to make assembly in a day easier.

Donated mattresses came in a box which said that was all you wanted in a bed was in the box.

A box was opened to display a mattress. When the plastic is removed, the mattress gets thicker.

John Isfort talked with a reporter from WKYT before the group of volunteers headed out Saturday to put up ten storage buildings. Isfort is hoping to get another ten storage buildings for flood victims.

Celebrate National Doctors' Day

Tuesday, March 30

A heartfelt thank you to Mercy Health's physicians and advanced practice clinicians! For the past year, these providers have not only continued to care for you — they have done so with all the additional challenges that COVID-19 brought to our communities. From the uncertainty that defined the early days of the pandemic...to today, as our vigilance continues...they have been with patients and families every step of the way.

Help us celebrate National Doctors' Day by sharing your appreciation for their extraordinary dedication, compassion and commitment.

Submit your thank you note at mercy.com/doctorsday
