AGRICULTURE NEWS

USDA Announces $50 Million To Help Ag Producers Restore Wildlife Habitat
Golden Winged-Warbler Part of Innovative Private Land Conservation to Benefit Agriculture and Wildlife
USDA's Natural Resources Conservation Service is making available about $50 million this year in financial assistance to partner with agricultural producers who want to restore and protect habitat for seven focus species, including the golden winged-warbler. Conservation efforts for the golden winged-warbler are part of Working Lands for Wildlife, an innovative partnership that supports struggling landscapes and strengthens agricultural operations.
"The decisions of agricultural producers can have significant impacts on wildlife," said Karen Woodrich, NRCS state conservationist in Kentucky. "By managing land with the golden-winged warbler and other wildlife in mind, producers can benefit entire populations while also strengthening their operations, boosting resilience and increasing agricultural yields."
This year, NRCS will invest about $1.15 million to restore habitat of the golden winged-warbler, a neotropical migratory songbird that breeds in young forest and shrubland habitats in the Appalachian Mountains and upper Great Lakes. Over that past 50 years, this vibrant songbird has experienced significant population declines throughout its Appalachian Mountain breeding range, and is at risk of needing protections under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). Since 2012, NRCS has worked with land managers to make conservation improvements to more than 13,000 acres of young forests, benefitting the golden winged-warbler and more than 100 other bird species. Technical and financial assistance is available through the Environmental Quality Incentives Program.
NRCS financial assistance covers part of the cost to implement conservation practices. Interested landowners are encouraged to contact their local USDA service center. USDA is an equal opportunity provider, employer and lender.
