A collection of War World I and War World II memorabilia was dedicated at the Estill County Historical and Genealogical Society Museum on Saturday.

"We've had these uniforms for a long time," said Diane Arthur, president of the local historical society.

However, the society chose to dedicate the veterans' area in the museum on Broadway in conjunction with Veterans Day observances.

Until recently, the uniforms had been hanging at the museum and were covered with dry cleaning bags.

"I just didn't like that," David Harrison stated. He is a member of the historical society and a veteran.

Harrison's plans were to build shadow boxes for the uniforms when he got time.

But about seven or eight months ago, he was at the Restore in Richmond and saw large picture frames with glass priced at only $2.00 each.

Harrison said you can't even buy the glass for $2.00.

He bought the frames and made them into shadow boxes, which now house the uniforms.

Harrison said when a service man or woman was discharged, he was given a uniform to wear for up to 60 days until he or she could obtain regular clothing. He said each uniform had either a button or a patch on the shoulder to indicate the service man or woman had been discharged.

Candidates must file by 4 p.m. January 30

Three democrats and two republicans have filed to run for Estill County Sheriff during the first week after the candidate enrollment period opened.

Sheriff Gary Freeman is not seeking re-election after serving five terms. He confirmed that four of the five candidates have served as deputies under him.

One of the republican candidates, Russell "Doc" Morris has been Freeman's deputy for about ten or twelve years.

The other republican candidate, Ken White, left to become Chief of Police in Ravenna.

Democrats Teddy Hunt and Terry Carroll also worked as deputies under Freeman, but for shorter periods of time. Freeman said that Hunt was part-time.

Chief White said that Hunt had also worked for the Irvine and Ravenna Police Departments in the past.

Hunt and Carroll are brothers-in-law. They are married to Missy Brandenburg Hunt and Sonya Brandenburg Carroll, who are sisters.

The fifth candidate is Christopher Shawn Flynn, a democrat.

Flynn is the son of a former sheriff, Glendle Flynn.

Jeff Hix has filed for re-election as Property Valuation Administrator (PVA) on the democratic ticket.

Beverly "Bo" Morris, a republican, has filed for re-election as Estill County Jailer.

Paul "J.P." Barnes, a republican, has filed for re-election as constable in District 2.

County attorney Rodney Davis has also filed for re-election to that office.

County Clerk Sherry L. Fox said the deadline to file for partisan offices is 4 p.m. January 30.

Candidates must meet age and residential qualifications. The PVA and Circuit Clerk positions require passing a test before one can file as a candidate.
