Marching Band hits the field on Saturday

CATHY DAWES
Estill Tribune Reporter

On Saturday the two time award winning Marching Engineers will hit the field in Bourbon County for their first competition of the season. With 68 band members this year the group has put in numerous hours of practice in the heat and rain to be ready for this competition.

The title of their performance is called "The Black Death" and is based on the Bubonic Plague that killed many people during the 12th century. The storyline of the show takes you through the steps of the Bubonic Plague from the time of infection until the time of death. For several years the band has performed shows that seem to be a little on the dark side, however, Band Director Jason Bowles said that the dark themed shows seem to get and hold the audiences attention because it's so mysterious. He also added that the band members respond well to these shows and the role that they portray in them. The past two shows are proof that Bowles and his staff are on to something because the band has won the state title in their class for two years in a row. "Our goal for this season is to make it back to the finals, which is the top four, and then we'll see from there," stated Bowles. Bowles said that the parents of the band members put in just as much hard work as the kids do, whether it be preparing food, altering uniforms, or building props. Parents were on hand on Monday afternoon building props for the show while the kids were practicing on the field. They will perform their show for the first time during halftime at the football game on Friday night. He said that there will also be several competitions close by in Madison County and in Powell County so friends and family members will be able to attend.

The Marching Engineers practiced "The Black Death" on Monday afternoon.
