

Winchester artist encourages local arts group

Bill Berryman spoke to the Estill Arts Council on Saturday evening about getting into juried groups. He lives in Winchester and teaches art at Sayre High.

Artist Bill Berryman of Winchester made an art presentation on Saturday evening for the Estill Arts Council.

Berryman displayed six of his works in pencil and watercolor. All of the artwork was inspired by Shaker Village at Pleasant Hill.

The works included a former musician, a coat and a broom hanging on the wall, two house pictures, and an outside entrance.

The Sayre High art teacher said he was drawn to the Shaker Village.

He expressed his disappointment that Shaker Village was no longer a living history museum.

One of the pencil works was of a T-shaped house on the North Lot, which is not open to the public.

Berryman started on Thursday a watercolor of the other side of the same house to bring to the presentation for Estill Arts. He completed it on Friday.

"The painting has helped my drawing," he stated.

In 2014, Berryman was accepted as a member of the Kentucky Guild of Artists and Craftsman.

In 2015, he was juried into Kentucky Arts Council's Kentucky Crafted Program as a visual artist. Berryman said he has not yet exhibited at The Marketplace.

Berryman gave members of the Estill Arts Council tips on getting accepted into those two programs.

He is also a member of the Winchester Arts Council, Bluegrass Drawing Society, Stoner Creek Arts Association, and The Arts Council of Mercer County.

Kathy Rivel, a member of the Estill Arts Council, looks over drawings and watercolors done by Berryman. He was inspired for all those pieces by the Shaker Village at Pleasant Hill. Berryman expressed his disappointment that Shaker Village, while open to the public, is no longer a living history museum.
