In addition to the adult inmates, Williams said the county is paying $92 to $94 a day for juvenile inmates.

County Attorney Rodney Davis stated the Rocket Docket has helped to reduce the number of inmates and saving money.

Magistrate Darrell Johnson said 16 years ago, the county was averaging about 30 prisoners a day.

The increase is blamed on the opioid crisis.

Davis said the opioid lawsuit the fiscal court had joined into was transferred to the federal court in Cleveland, as expected.

He stated the Estill Ambulance Service and Owsley County will be joining in the lawsuit.

Some have called the opioid lawsuit settlement bigger than the tobacco settlement.

Williams said that seven local people have been certified to supervise work release employees.

However, he said the problem is finding available inmates for the work release program.

To offset this problem, a pay increase was given to community service groups who clean up roadside litter. Williams said this is paid from a grant.

He added the tire amnesty program will be held Oct. 18, 19, and 20 at the state highway garage on Cow Creek Road. Only local residents can dispose of old tires during those three days.

Fire Chief Derrick Muncie reported the fire season began Oct. 1 and will continue until Dec. 15.

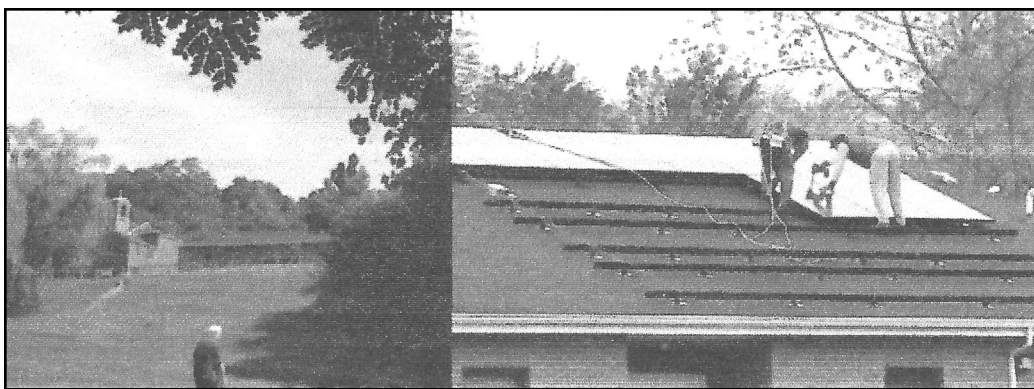

The fire department participated in the CSEPP drill recently. The department also changed their florescent lights to LED ones.

The firefighters have also received extra narcan training and are being called upon more often to assist with medical emergencies.

Hollywood Park has opened, and Williams said he wants a trail-head located in Estill County.

The last Moonlight Market of the year is this Friday night on Broadway.

Williams congratulated the band, boys and girls golf teams, volleyball and soccer teams for their accomplishments this season.

St. Elizabeth Church receives 2018 Hope and Action Award

Kentucky Power and Light is pleased to honor St. Elizabeth of Hungary Catholic Church (at Ravenna) as recipient of the 2018 Hope and Action Award.

This is in recognition of their faithful stewardship of creation as demonstrated by their efforts in bringing environmental concerns into their house of worship and congregational life.

St. Elizabeth of Hungary has long held values that call for proper care of God's creation and its natural resources.

The church has sponsored an herb club for many years which led to a community garden that is tended by both congregants and non-congregants, but they wanted to go further.

In an effort to both lower their carbon footprint and set an example for their community in Ravenna, the church has installed a 32 panel solar-array.

To met the congregation's growing interest in sustainable landscaping and gardening, St. Elizabeth has completed a number of projects including the planting of shade trees, incorporation of edible landscaping, a vegetable and herb garden, a native-species wild border around the church property, and a composting program.

Through an extensive collaboration with local organizations and individuals, the church also used a problematic natural spring on the property as an opportunity to install native wetlands to the area.

St. Elizabeth has also started a Youtube series called "Earth Healing" that documents many of their projects and their relationship with the natural world.

St. Elizabeth of Hungary's passion for stewardship has inspired both church members and non-members to embrace the divine in nature.

A Winchester woman was arrested Oct. 4 and charged with second degree assault. Deputy Chris Coffey was dispatched to Baker pool Supply because a man was lying on the ground.

Irvine Police notified Coffey that the woman had hit the man with brass knuckles. The male victim told Coffey that he was arguing with the female and she hit him with the knuckles near the eye. The officer said the man's left eye was swollen and bleeding.

Coffey recovered the brass knuckles from the lady's handbag.

EMS picked up the man and transported him to the hospital. Coffey said the man's eye was possibly fractured. It had swollen almost completely shut.

He charged Kristin White, 26, with carrying a concealed weapon and assault second degree. She was arraigned on Oct. 5 and pled not-guilty to both charges. A preliminary hearing was scheduled for Oct. 10.

Man Charged with Domestic Violence

An Estill County man was arrested Sunday night as the result of a rolling domestic disturbance through Irvine and Ravenna. Someone called in a 1991 Nissan king cab in which a couple were having a possible domestic dispute.

Irvine Officer Colton Lewis said the vehicle was located in Ravenna next to Michael's restaurant. The man and woman were actively arguing. The vehicle was swerving and failed to stay in its lane of travel.

Officer Lewis stated he activated his blue lights on the vehicle at Michael's Restaurant. The vehicle did not stop and fled to Broadway on the Irvine-Ravenna line. The driver eventually obeyed the officer's commands, Lewis stated.

Lewis was assisted at the scene by Constable Ricky Williams, Trooper Casey Caudill, and Deputies Doc Morris and Roger McIntosh.

The driver, Ricky Alan Hobbs, 31, of John Rawlings Road, Irvine was charged with fleeing or evading police, first degree (motor vehicle), driving on DUI suspended license, second offense, second degree disorderly conduct, reckless driving, and resisting arrest.

Upon arrival the officer said he smelled marijuana and the man sitting on the porch. He said the man acted as if he was going to flee and destroy evidence.

The man then yelled that he had done nothing wrong. Lewis said the man refused to comply with commands, such as taking his hands out of his pockets.

He added the man was physically taken to the ground by himself and Officer Sean Davis. He said the man threw down a white pill, which was later identified as hydrocortisone.

Christopher A. Thacker, 23, was charged with disorderly conduct, second degree, resisting arrest, possession of a controlled substance, first degree and first offense, tampering with physical evidence, drug paraphernalia - buy/possess, and menacing.

Thacker was arraigned Oct. 12. He pled not guilty to all counts.

Arrested for Domestic Violence

On Oct. 7, Trooper Casey Caudill arrested a man for fleeing two days earlier.

Another trooper, Roark, was on Trotting Ridge Road two days earlier looking for a reckless driver in a small gray Pickup. The caller told Trooper Roark it appeared as if a female was trying to get out of the pickup.

Trooper Roark located the vehicle and attempted a traffic stop. He said the vehicle turned into a gravel driveway. The driver jumped out and fled on foot. He was unable to locate the man who escaped into the woods.

The female passenger told the trooper there had been a physical confrontation between her and the driver. She had been struck under the right eye.

She also told the trooper the man had been driving recklessly due to them fighting in the vehicle. He refused to let her out.

KSP says the truck did not have a proper license plate.

Two days later, dispatch advised the male subject was at Wendy's. Trooper Caudill responded there and made the arrest. He charged David A. Noland, 31, of Scott Court, Irvine with fleeing or evading policies, first degree (motor vehicle), fourth degree assault, second degree wanton endangerment, and improper registration plates.
