

Hospital Foundation upgrades ultrasound technology at Marcum & Wallace

The Marcum and Wallace Hospital Foundation recently funded a $50,000 project for the radiology department at Marcum and Wallace Hospital to upgrade the portable ultrasound technology. The funds for the project were raised at the Foundation's annual fundraiser in September 2017 (golf scramble and Paradise Luau).

For over a decade, Marcum and Wallace Hospital has used a portable ultrasound for carotid artery and thyroid ultrasound screenings at community events (free of charge). The ultrasound scans the carotid artery for blockages and scans the thyroid for cysts or nodules. Both screenings can identify health problems that potentially wouldn't show up otherwise; until the person has a stroke or can feel the nodule on their neck. A portable ultrasound is also used in the emergency department when the physician would need to scan for abnormal bleeding or fluid in a patient's stomach or to monitor a patient's heart motion during a heart attack.

"The portable ultrasound is extremely important in the community and in the emergency department. Over the years, I have screened thousands of people at community events and we do sometimes find results that people were not expecting. Our emergency department physicians appreciate having quick access to this technology when a patient has been injured or is having a heart attack," said Sharon Whitaker, Marcum and Wallace Hospital Radiology director. "The upgrade not only improves the ultrasound quality, but the size of the ultrasound was reduced from equipment that would fit in a small suitcase to equipment that isn't much larger than a smart phone."

Arielle Estes, Marcum and Wallace Hospital Foundation director, said, "I want to extend a heartfelt thanks to the community for their support of the Marcum and Wallace Hospital Foundation. Because of the generous support of our donors, we have state-of-the-art portable ultrasound technology to provide free health screenings in our community and to treat patients in our emergency department."

For more information about the carotid artery and thyroid ultrasound or supporting the Marcum and Wallace Hospital Foundation, contact 606-726-2119. Save the date for the 2018 Marcum and Wallace Hospital Foundation golf scramble and Paradise Luau to be held on October 13th at the Estill County Golf Club.

Sharon Whitaker, Marcum and Wallace Hospital Radiology director, performs an ultrasound on Francie Snowden at a recent community event. The Marcum and Wallace Hospital Foundation funded the upgrade for the new portable ultrasound technology that scans the carotid artery for blockages and the thyroid for cysts or nodules. Marcum and Wallace Hospital offers these free ultrasound screenings at community events around the region. A portable ultrasound is also used in the emergency department.
